In a much-anticipated matchup at NBT Field on a picturesque Saturday, the Nationals played host to the Phillies in an action-packed game of baseball. The Nationals took an early lead behind the impressive pitching performance from Evan Rogoff, who kept the Phillies off the scoreboard for three solid innings. However, it was in the bottom of the third inning when the Nationals' bats truly came alive. With a display of power, they exploded for a staggering eight runs, capitalizing on seven hits (2 triples and 1 double). The Phillies refused to back down, mounting a comeback in the fourth inning by tallying three runs of their own, narrowing the gap in the scoreline. As the game progressed, it became evident that both teams were not willing to relinquish their chance at victory. In a thrilling turn of events, the Phillies fought back fiercely in the top of the sixth inning by plating 6 runs with 6 hits but, the Nationals early lead proved to be too much to overcome in the end. The Nationals improve to 3-2 on the season and travel to Falter Field to take on the Homer Yankees on Monday night.
